How were these prices calculated and what are they based on?

This is Healthcare Blue Book's recommended price for a total knee replacement.

The fair price recommendation is based on the typical negotiated payment amount that providers accept from insurance companies.

If you have insurance, you should be able to find in-network providers that accept prices at or below the Blue Book fair price, although many providers may charge more.

How should consumers use this information?

You can use the Blue Book fair price as a guide to help you compare prices when you shop for care and to make sure that you receive treatment at a fair price.

If you have health insurance, you should use your provider directory to identify in-network providers in your area. Total knee replacement is an orthopedic procedure and is typically performed by an orthopedic surgeon.

You can call the providers or your health insurance company to get a cost estimate. You will need to know the name of the procedure and possibly the Current Procedural Terminology (CPT) code for the service you need. It is also useful to have your insurance card available.

Prices for total knee replacement may range from $19,000 to over $40,000 in many areas. We recommend that you call several providers to find one that charges a fair price.

If you do not have insurance, make sure to let the office know that you are a self-paying patient. Self-pay patients are frequently quoted the billed charges amount (like the sticker price for a new car) for the service, which can be 2 to 3 times what the provider would accept from an insurance company. Many providers will offer a discount to self pay patients – but you must remember to ask for the discount.

Key points to consider when shopping for knee replacement.

- Total knee replacement pricing can vary by over 200% in some locations. It is not uncommon to find total knee replacement pricing from $19,000 to more than $40,000. You should call several providers to ask about the price of your total knee replacement before you have your procedure.
- The fair price does not include the cost of the knee implant. The implanted device can cost anywhere from $6,000 to over $10,000. You should talk to your doctor about the device that is right for your needs.

- Make sure that the price estimate includes the physician fee, the facility fee and the anesthesia fee. You may need to call your physician, the facility and the anesthesia practice to get prices.
- Be sure to also ask about other costs you may have to pay that are related to the surgery. These costs may include laboratory tests before and after the procedure, imaging tests (x-ray, CT, MRI), post surgery rehabilitation and medications.
- If your Primary Care Physician has already referred you to a specialist, make sure to ask for their price and compare it to the Blue Book fair price before receiving treatment.
- If you get a price estimate that is significantly higher than the fair price, you may want to talk to your doctor about other facilities where you could have your procedure performed.
- If you have a Health Savings Account (HSA) or Health Reimbursement Account (HRA) you can apply those funds to any deductible, co-insurance or other out of pocket costs.

Is a total knee replacement typically covered by health insurance plans?

Yes, total knee replacement is usually covered by health insurance. Always check with your insurer to make sure a procedure is covered before seeking treatment.

Your insurer may require pre-certification prior to agreeing to cover your total knee replacement. You should always ask and then confirm that your provider is going to obtain pre-certification for your total knee replacement before you receive treatment.

If your provider does not obtain pre-certification prior to your total knee replacement, you will need to call the health plan and request pre-certification yourself. Insurers may deny payment of the claim if you have not obtained pre-certification.

Is a total knee replacement typically covered by Medicare or Medicaid plans?

Yes, total knee replacement is covered under Medicare and Medicaid. Your provider may need to establish medical necessity or pre-certification before you receive treatment.

What kind of out-of-pocket costs should I expect to pay?

Your out of pocket costs will depend on the type of insurance that you have. You may be responsible for copays, deductibles or coinsurance amounts. In order to determine your out of pocket costs, always review your co-pay amounts, current deductible balance and current co-insurance obligation before seeking treatment. If you have questions about your benefit plan or out of pocket costs, talk to your insurance company.

Remember, if you have a Health Savings Account (HSA) or Health Reimbursement Account (HRA) you can apply those funds to any deductible, co-insurance or other out of pocket costs.

Do the costs for this service vary depending on which provider I use?

The price variation in some locations can vary by over 200%. Make sure to ask about the price of this service before you get your care to make sure that you will be charged a fair price. If you are not satisfied with a provider's price, you can consider other providers that may offer you a more reasonable price.

What other trends or variations in cost should I be aware of?

There are a few things to consider when evaluating the need for a total knee replacement.

First, do you need the surgery? Artificial knee joints have a finite useable life before they wear out and have to be replaced. Most physicians encourage patients to delay having a joint replaced for as long as possible. However, patients should bear in mind the need to revise or replace a joint at some point in the future.

What other tips can help me ensure I get the best price?

The choice of hospital for your total knee replacement will usually have the biggest impact on your total price.

Many surgeons only operate at certain hospitals. You may want to find out what hospitals have the best pricing and then find surgeons who can do your surgery at those hospitals.

Qualifications

Hospitals should be accredited by The Joint Commission on Accreditation for Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO).

Orthopedic surgeons should be board certified by the American Board of Orthopedic Surgeons.

The pricing and benefits information reflected in this report is based upon the common pricing and practices found in most markets and may not reflect the specific pricing or health benefits available to you. Some providers charge amounts well in excess of the Blue Book fair price. Some insurance plans cover services differently. If possible, you should check with your medical provider and health insurance company to confirm pricing and benefit coverage for services before you get care. In addition, you will want to check on your providers' quality information.
